

“Her talk was incredible... one of the best I’ve experienced at a conference, maybe ever.”

Julia Soffa, Pennsylvania Women’s Conference attendee

Dr. Meg Myers Morgan delivers with the pacing of a comic and the patience of a storyteller. Her visually-driven, meticulously crafted shows explore self-worth – the thing that determines the rooms we enter, the deals we negotiate, and the lives we lead. Audiences laugh out loud, then go quiet. Sometimes in the same breath. Her true superpower? She speaks to hundreds and makes every single person feel like an audience of one, privately known in a packed room. The result: people leave with language for things they couldn't name before and the nerve to act on them. If your people are burned out, undervaluing themselves, or shrinking in rooms they should be owning, Meg will lace up her sneakers and head your way.

“Easily the strongest speaker we've worked with.”

The Setlist.

A Self-Worth Journey, in Three Acts

Dr. Morgan's keynotes trace a single journey through self-worth, told in three parts: breaking down what isn't working in their careers, rebuilding their sense of self once old assumptions and habits fall away, and turning self-worth into action by negotiating for what they need and want. Each talk stands entirely on its own — and each one leaves audiences with a sharper sense of their own value and the confidence to lead from it.
